Colors & Finishes

POWDER-COATED

A process that involves applying a dry powder to a surface and then heating until it melts and forms a smooth, durable coating. It provides a protective layer that resists corrosion, fading, and chipping.

PLATED

Involves electroplating a metal layer onto a surface with chemicals mixtures. Much less resistant to chipping and scratches than powder coated. Metal plating can be environmentally harmful and costly due to the use of toxic chemicals, high water and energy consumption, waste generation, and maintenance costs. Alternatives such as powder coated provide similar benefits with fewer environmental impacts and lower costs.
